

Figure 7.6 The positron-emitting radionuclide ^{11}C decays to form a positron, which annihilates with an electron. The resulting gamma energy, two photons travelling in opposite directions, can be detected externally by a ring of scintillation detectors placed around the subject in the PET camera.